MANUFACTURE OF BOCUS WINES.

"Imported" Brands Made in a New York Basement—Distillation of Raisins. There are several old Frenchmen in New York who have made almost national reputations as wine dealers and experts. They have about retired from business, but, with the proverbial thrift of their nation, they still find time to tend to their shops a few hours daily. Some of them have large restaurants in connection with their wholesale and retail wine trade, and favored cus-tomers are often given an opportunity to smack their lips over some rare old whee, whose label is too dust begrimed to be legi-ble, and as they hold the wine to the light they become enthusiastic over its color, flavor, and bouquet, and probably order several dozen bottles of it sent to their

Now this wine may be old and it may be new. It may have been imported from France, or perchance it was pressed out on the sunny Italian hills; but it is more than probable that the old Franchman, unless he knows that his customer has a trained and delente public, less given him some wine that is but the partial product of the vine, and was concected under the skilled eye of mersionr in the sub-basement of the very stablishment where it is drunk. Why should one find famil? It is surely more com-plimentary in a host to give one the result of his own labor than to furnish one with that of another. If it is a real wine there is exactly one chance in 10,000 that it is what the label represents it to be. It may be the outcome of a judicious mixture of several indifferent varieties blended into a harmonions whole, or it may be an American wine sailing under false colors.

Human ingenuity has never yet been able to make wine without some small percentage of alcohol, so this element remains as a base for the worst of productions. As a rule the manufactured wines are offered rule the maniflatured wines are offered either as Caliberia wines, or as vin ordinaire, or sour chard. They are the distillation of raisins colored with logwood. The misins are placed in a vat filled with water at a temperature of 60 degrees, there being fifty five gallous of water to every hundredweight of raisins. Some sugar is often thrown in to hasten fermentation, which untilly lests eight or ten days, at the end of which time the liquid is drawn off and wine in made. the liquid is drawn off and wine is made. It is, of course pair, and it is dectored with some high colored Spanish wine, which is cheap, and then a solution of logwood is cheap, and then a solution of logwood is added. These when do not, at the most, contain more than 10 per cent of alcohol, and having but little tannin they will not keep long. When wine is thus produced it will not cost much. Itsisins are not expen-tive, and a moldy article answers as well as one that is fresh. A noted French chem-ist has declared that the raisin wine, if not drugged, is wastly more beautiful than many of the mixtures, most of them deleterious, sold for genuine wine. This may give wine drinkers a spark of encouragement, for there is no way of accounting for the construction of the enormous raisin produets of Italy, Turkey, Spain and Greece, unless one admits that they are used to take the place of grapes.-New York Commer-

He Sued for His Salary. I never know of more than one preacher who sued for his salary, and he got it. It was in Franklin county. The leading men wrote him a letter guarantering that the church could and would pay him a good salary—one of these offland letters which churches noted for not paying will write. He went and served them a whole year neceptably, meekly and patiently. In fact, they were astonished at his patience. Then he demanded all of his salary that was due. Again they were astonished to meet a man who was not willing to take just what the church had seen fit to give him voluntarily. But he told them they had caused him to contract debts on the strength of the promises made by their official members, and those debts had to be paid. He went into Pt. Allen.
